BIO

Dr. Nicole Price is a chemical engineer turned leadership development expert who has spent over a decade leading enterprise-wide teams in corporate environments. Her transition to learning and development was sparked by a desire to share the principles that fueled her own leadership success, including empathy, accountability, and a focus on practical results.

Renowned for infusing humor and relatable stories into her global keynotes and training sessions, Dr. Price captivates audiences while delivering powerful insights on how to unlock leadership brilliance. Through her company, she has transformed workplace cultures across a range of industries, showing leaders how to overcome people challenges and drive sustainable outcomes.

Dr. Price holds a chemical engineering degree from North Carolina A&T State University, a master's in adult education from Park University, and a doctorate in leadership and management from Capella University, with postdoctoral studies at Stanford. She is currently leading the "Unlock Your Leadership Brilliance: Overcome People Challenges and Drive Results" masterclass series, a testament to her commitment to helping leaders master both technical and human elements of organizational success. Her work proves that empathetic, people-focused leadership not only feels good—it produces measurable, bottom-line impact.
